

A MONSTER ON THE OCEAN

A WORTHLESS SEAMAN KILLS HIS CAPTAIN AND FIVE SHIPMATES.

Six Men Brutally Murdered and Their Bodies Thrown Overboard—Fearful Struggle Between a Mate and a Fiend. The Cause of the Horrible Tragedy.

DENMARK, Nov. 28.—A horrible murder took place on the 19th inst., on a Russian schooner in the Baltic sea, near the island of Bornholm. This schooner was the Johannes, of Riga, Capt. Behring. It left Riga in the early part of October, with a cargo of deals for England. The crew consisted of the captain, a mate and six hands. Among these was one Jan Umb, a worthless fellow, who was caught robbing his shipmates, as well as stealing ropes from the ship. The officers and the crew began teasing and chastising him.

On the 18th of November, when off Bornholm, Jan Umb jumped overboard. A rope was thrown to him and he was hauled on board, after which his life was made one of absolute misery. The night following was very dark. Jan Umb took advantage of the darkness to murder the captain and five of his shipmates, whom he afterward threw overboard. Not satisfied with this, he next half murdered the mate, who was asleep in the cabin.

The immediate cause of the matter was this: Jan Umb was at the wheel. He did not steer to the captain's satisfaction and the captain hit him with a rope. Jan Umb then got in a rage, took a piece of wood and knocked the captain down, and then the helmsman who had relieved him. Next he went to the lookout and killed him. After this he called the other watch (three men) from the fore-castle and killed them one after the other. Some of them were not quite dead when he threw them overboard. He saw a boy, a relative of the master, crying and begging for his life, but the brute threw him overboard also. Then he gathered all the valuables he could get hold of, taking the captain's watch and wedding ring before throwing him overboard. He then went down in the cabin, ax in hand, to kill the mate and get his money. The mate heard him, but thought it was the master. The murderer went to the bed and struck at the mate. Instead of hitting him on the head he cut him in the leg. A struggle ensued and the mate succeeded in securing him away with an imaginary revolver.

The murderer then went on deck, lashed a knife to a long pole and tried to stab the mate with this through the cabin window. But the mate, bleeding, managed to keep out of his reach. The brute, seeing he could not reach him, began to pour petroleum down the cabin. He next dipped a rope in petroleum, applied a match to it and then dropped it down the cabin, so as to set fire to the oil he had poured down and burn the ship and mate with it. Then he went aft to nail the cabin door; but meanwhile the mate had climbed through the cabin window, and he came back to the murderer while the latter was busy nailing the door and knocked him down with a piece of wood, pulled him to the mizzen rigging, lashed him thereto, put a rope around his neck and tied his hands, and then he fell senseless to the deck through loss of blood, where he was found by the mate of a passing Danish steamer, who had observed the ship without any man visible on deck to manage her.

This was about 8 o'clock in the morning. The murderer had about half the night engaged in his murderous work. Several ships were now in sight. At 7:30 a Swedish steamer had passed close under the schooner's stern, but, thinking all was right, steered away again. Then the Danish steamer took charge of the ship. The steamer's mate and four of the hands went on board, and, seeing what had been done, tied the murderer in the mizzen rigging and set one man to watch him. After dressing the mate's wounds they towed the schooner to Copenhagen, where the police took charge and carried the mate to a hospital. The murderer was examined as to his sanity, but he was found to be quite normal. He has now confessed his crime, and will be delivered to the Russian authorities.

When the murderer was taken on board the schooner to show the police how he had committed the crime he wept like a child. The captain has a young wife and a little child in Russia to lament their loss. The mate is recovering from his wounds, and the schooner will soon continue its voyage to England.

THE PLANTATION TROUBLES.

It is Now Believed That Thirty People Were Killed in the Fight.

TRIBUNE, La., Nov. 28.—Although the town is now quiet, sentries are stationed on all the approaching roads. There are very few negroes in the town. Two of their leaders, Enoch Adams and Solomon Williams, returned to town last night, but were immediately driven away. Later, Williams again returned and asked the sheriff to take him into custody and protect him. This the sheriff refused to do on the ground that there was no charge against him. The woods in the neighborhood are full of hiding negroes.

The bodies of three dead negroes, were found in the thicket yesterday. They had evidently been shot in Wednesday's riot and crawled into the bushes to die. It is thought that the total number killed during the trouble will reach thirty. The planters report that in consequence of the strike and the riot they have lost one-third of the crop. At 5 o'clock last night it was learned that a mob contemplated taking the two Cox brothers, leading strikers, from the jail and lynch them. For their protection they were released and made their escape over the bayou.
